

Granada

Ewa Ochman 3TF

A little bit about Granada

Granada is a city in Andalusia, placed in south part of Spain. The city is located in the valley of the Genil River, in the Baetic Mountains. Nearby there is the highest range of the Iberian Peninsula - the Sierra Nevada, and beyond it, the Mediterranean Sea with the Costa del Sol.

Alhambra

The Alhambra is a beautiful palace and fortress complex in Granada, built in the 13th century by the Nasrid dynasty. It showcases stunning Moorish architecture, with intricate decorations, serene gardens, and breathtaking views of the city and Sierra Nevada mountains. The Alhambra includes the Nasrid Palaces, Generalife gardens, the Alcazaba fortress, and the Palace of Charles V, making it one of Spain's most famous historical sites.

Alhambra

Albaicín

Albaicín is an old part of Granada, famous for its narrow streets and white houses. It's on a hill, so you get great views of the city and the Alhambra. It's full of history and has a special atmosphere that attracts lots of visitors.

Albaicín

Culture and festivals

Granada is known for its vibrant cultural scene, including flamenco music and dance. The city hosts various festivals, like the Granada International Festival of Music and Dance and the Holy Week processions.

Flamenco dance

Granada is deeply rooted in flamenco culture, with passionate performances held in intimate venues known as "tablaos" throughout the city. Flamenco, with its expressive dance, soulful music, and intricate guitar playing, is an integral part of Granada's cultural identity.

Holy week

During Holy Week in Granada, called Semana Santa, there are big processions with fancy floats showing scenes from Jesus' life. They go through the city streets with serious music and a nice smell of incense.

Tapas culture

Granada's tapas culture is a beloved tradition where ordering a drink often comes with a complimentary small dish, making it a budget-friendly culinary adventure. From traditional Spanish favorites to innovative creations, tapas bars offer a diverse range of flavors to enjoy while socializing with friends and family.

Bar hopping to sample different tapas specialties is a popular pastime, showcasing the city's vibrant culinary scene and inclusive atmosphere.

The End

Thanks for attention !

